AIMS SCIENTIFIC, OFFICIAL CLAIMS

Aeronautic Engineers Suspected of Trying to Get Undeserved Places on Board.

By GORDON BRUCE.

There is considerable resentment among members of the Aeronautical Society of America toward the new body known as the American Society of Aeronautic Engineers. Some of them believe that the organization, which had its inception in the Aero Club of America, was formed with the purpose of taking credit which rightfully belongs to the Aeronautical Society.

The facts are these, and the case may be decided on its merits:

On July 19, at the request of Thomas A. Edison, chairman of the Navy Advisory Board, Secretary Daniels requested the Aeronautical Society to select two members to serve on said board. That fact was printed in the newspapers. Next day the Secretary telephoned the society to advise its decision by wire. That was done.

A meeting of the Aeronautical Society was called and Hudson Maxim and Matthew Sellers, of Baltimore, were chosen. The names were forwarded to Mr. Daniels the next day.

On July 23 Secretary Daniels wrote Frederick W. Barker, acting president of the Aeronautical Society, to the effect that he had been informed that the Aeronautical Society was not organization and that it was not qualified to handle engineering problems. Further, he stated that he understood there was a society known as the American Society of Aeronautic Engineers, the membership of which included the foremost experts in the field.

Mr. Barker went to Washington and took the matter up with the Secretary in person. He explained that the Aeronautical Society was not and never had been a social organization, and had always devoted itself to the study of technical matters. Mr. Daniels adopted the viewpoint of Mr. Barker and later notified him by letter that the appointments of Maxim and Sellers would be acceptable.

The points which some members of the Aeronautical Society object to are these: The American Society of Aeronautic Engineers was formed hastily so hastily, in fact, that a long list of telephone calls to round up enough prospective charter members to make a showing.

Many of the so-called charter members knew nothing of the plan to organize until after it was all over.

All of the names of charter members are to be found on the rolls of the Aero Club of America.

The Aero Club of America has time again stated that it was a sporting and social body and that it recognized the Aeronautical Society as a technical body.

Henry Woodhouse, of the Aero Club, said yesterday that the two organizations—the Aero Club and the American Society of Aeronautic Engineers—were separate and distinct bodies. The present headquarters of the latter, however, are at the Aero Club, where Mr. Woodhouse found that the Aeronautical Society was a stock corporation he had ceased to look with favor upon it as a source of assistance.
